Licia Mattioli, trained as a lawyer and with a vocation for entrepreneurship, is married with two children. In December 1995 she and her father acquired an initial share in Antica Ditta Marchisio, the oldest and best ranking artisan jewel lab in Turin (the firm boasts the 'historical' 1TO trademark), and began a process of total renovation, involving both management and organisation. They took over completely in '99 and in a few years had a staff of 240 (originally there were 25), making it one of the European leaders of the sector.

In 2000 Licia Mattioli launched a new line bearing her name, blending the established tradition of luxury, handmade jewels with her own strong identity, gained from her experience as a gallery owner. Indeed, at the same time she ran a contemporary art gallery in Turin to promote and launch young Italian artists, soon becoming a cornerstone for emerging artists.

From the United States to Japan via Europe, Mattioli begins to strengthen its identity, gradually winning the trust of retail outlets and consumers, with about 150 stores in 30 countries.

At the same time she has carried out various associative roles with the same intensity and determination.
