

Valeria Cappellato, PhD in Comparative Social Research, is currently a postdoctoral researcher at the Department of Cultures, Politics and Society of the Università degli Studi di Torino within the Research Project of National Interest (PRIN) "Death, Dying and Disposal in Italy: Attitudes, Behaviours, Beliefs, Rituals".

In recent years she has been teaching Sociology of Health, a course included in the degree programme in Nursing Studies at the University of Turin. Former guest lecturer in Equal Rights and Opportunities Policies, a subject included in the degree programme in Administrative and Organizational Studies at the University of Turin, she has carried out training work in equal opportunities policies and policies against discrimination for various organisations, including UNAR, the Region of Piedmont, and the City of Turin.

She has taken part in many national and local research projects on welfare, equal opportunities, inequality, and discrimination.

During the last years her main research interests have been: social and health policies, health and social care integration, and the organisation of care pathways for the elderly, the disabled, and people suffering from chronic and/or degenerative diseases.

From 2004 to 2006, she collaborated with the International Labour Organization by training public and private officials on subjects such as equal opportunities, conciliation policies, and male and female workers' rights.

From 2000 to 2004, she held the position of assistant director, in charge of planning/implementing European FSE projects and organising national and international conferences at CIRSDe (Interdisciplinary Centre for Women's and Gender Studies) of the University of Turin.

Since 2008 she is a member of the Executive Board of Associazione Centro Studi e Documentazione del Pensiero Femminile (Centre for Studies and Documentation on Feminist Thought) of Turin. From 2004 to 2014 she was a member of the assembly of Cirsde - Interdisciplinary Centre for Women's and Gender Studies – at the University of Turin.
